- Reinhard Neuberger sends his best regards from Munich/Germany: Hello, it's been a long time ago when we were in contact. A lot has happened in the meantime and a new project with more than 2 years of development is completed. The DEC RL01/RL02 disk simulator is up and running. More details, including a video can be obtained from my homepage www.pdp11gy.com
The idea behind my project is as follows: General, a Hardware has a life cycle but the Software never can die. When the children of our children are grown, they have the opportunity to remind themselves of the DEC software and they can also run too real. I was just the beginning and maybe find someone to enhance and develop the project. A sponsor would be a great help. Finally, it is a question of money and time. Anyway, have fun with my video, It is a beautiful reminder of the DEC time. Reinhard.Heuberger@gmx.de
- DEC Connection member Alan Miller writes: I never "left DEC"...still with HP (30+ years). I'm a Program Manager for HP Enterprise

Services; currently finishing up a 2-year data center migration project for Coca-Cola in Atlanta. Alan Miller, PMP millerlanh@comcast.net

- John Potucek (SVO & NIO, 119648) writes in with a Digital trivia question for all: Who decided on the TLA (three-letter acronym) for a site? Mostly ALL sites were designated by their location, i.e.: MKO=Merrimack, MRO=Marlboro. WHY was Salem Manufacturing (building = to size of WMO) given the TLA of NIO??? Send your answer to webmaster@deconnection.org and we'll publish it next month (I'll forward them to John as well.) potucek1@comcast.net
