- Our new Featured Entrepreneur, Barbara Finer, was with Digital for 5 years, having started as an applications programmer in operations (aka IT) as a co-op student at Northeastern University. After a stint in Large Systems Engineering working on compilers and operating systems, Barbara left to go to her first start-up. As the product manager and chief evangelist, she helped lead that company to develop a medical system for analyzing and sharing radiology information which was then acquired by Analogic. The entrepreneurship bug bit her. After joining or starting several tech companies, typically as their business development or marketing lead, Barbara started teaching both marketing and entrepreneurship at local colleges. Barbara has been on several Boards, for profit and non, advises and mentors other young companies, and still keeps a few toes in theater and dance. After a year of thinking about the entrepreneurial eco-system in Boston and how this region needs to 'get its groove back', Barbara opened a sci-tech innovation center/incubator, TechSandBox™, in Southborough. Read all about it here.
- From Anne Hunter: Prior to leaving Digital in 1987 I took painting lessons as a diversion from my high stress marketing job. Within a year of leaving I was teaching classes and had opened my own studio. What started as a hobby has turned into an extremely satisfying business venture teaching others how to paint and writing books and articles on painting for the web and for local and overseas publications. I also teach at a number of local art galleries and travel to teach at conventions, conferences and at chapter meetings of the Society of Decorative Painters. Go to my website at <http://www.thecreativetouch.com> for more information on current activities or email me at creativetouch@earthlink.net.

- Roland Olivier (DEC 1976-1995) writes: I am a business, technology and international lawyer. I've just announced the opening of my law practice focused particularly on entrepreneurs, startups, small businesses, emerging companies, hi-tech companies (hardware, software and services), manufacturing companies and companies expanding into or seeking international markets for their products. I am available to provide legal and governance services, to counsel clients on establishing domestic and international operations, to help finance their business, to resolve commercial disputes and to help them structure, negotiate and close complex commercial transactions, real estate transactions, intellectual property licenses and international business transactions. This includes sales, service, distribution, licensing, sourcing, purchasing, joint venture, strategic marketing, and merger & acquisition agreements, and real estate acquisitions, leases and sales. You can contact me on LinkedIn, Facebook or via email lawconsult09@yahoo.com.
- Beryl Sachs writes: Jean & I were from Baltimore until we married in 1972 and I joined DEC in NC. We moved to Upstate NY and MA. Three years ago we moved back home to Baltimore living on the Chesapeake Bay. b.sachs@verizon.net
- Gail (Georges Smith) Hernandez writes: Although I'm currently a corporate trade show manager, I'm looking for contract trade show consulting projects starting July 2, 2013. I also sell Premier Designs High Fashion jewelry for fun and profit.

Since 1994, I've been offering my trade show marketing skills to large and small businesses as The Trade Show Maven. In addition to strategic planning I offer booth staff training and logistics assistance. As a Diamond-Level CTSM professional (Certified Trade Show Marketer), I advise other trade show and event professionals with their certification and also am a career advocate for anyone seeking employment (that means I try to give good advice!) I welcome the opportunity to talk with anyone interested in improving their trade show or event program. I can be reached at 978-562-9237 and via email at tradeshowmaven@yahoo.com
